

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

Showers will become more frequent during Thursday, before becoming more isolated again overnight. Road temperatures will fall below zero fairly quickly during the evening over upland areas and in Scotland, that is away from windward coasts, then in other parts of the warning area after midnight, so there is a risk of ice forming on untreated surfaces. Also, some of the showers may be heavy enough during the evening to cause salt wash-off in some places.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 20:00 on Thu, 18th Feb 2016 until 10:00 on Fri, 19th Feb 2016

Further showers, falling as rain or hail at low levels and sleet or snow over high ground will continue well into Thursday night. Clear spells between the showers will allow temperatures to fall below freezing, so please be aware of the risk of ice forming on untreated surfaces.
