

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

An area of rain will continue over parts of central and eastern England during Tuesday with some thundery downpours possible. 20-30 mm of rain, and possibly very locally 40 mm, could fall in 3-4 hours.

From late Tuesday morning, showers are then expected to develop across parts of the east and southeast of England. Whilst many will miss the worst of the rain, the heaviest showers could bring 25 mm in an hour to some spots with 50 mm in 2-3 hours possible.

The warning has been adjusted to move the area northwards and extend the end time until the end of Tuesday.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 10:20 on Tue, 08th Aug 2017 until 23:55 on Tue, 08th Aug 2017

An area of rain with possible thundery downpours will continue over parts of central and eastern England on Tuesday with further thundery showers expected to develop to the southeast of this area. These will die out for many during Tuesday evening but may persist over Humberside, Lincolnshire and Norfolk coasts into Tuesday night.

Where the thundery showers develop they are likely to be slow moving hence some areas may miss the showers entirely whilst others could see 2 to 3 hours of heavy rain.

Where this occurs some disruption is possible such as longer journey times due to flooding of roads and perhaps some flooding of homes and businesses. These impacts will only be localised however.
