

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

A plume of warm air from central Europe is expected to come west across southern areas. This will contain deep layers of convection which are likely to bring heavy, showery bursts of rain. Models differ in their handling of this feature, some bringing the main axis of rain across southern coastal counties of England, others in a zone to the north of the M4. So there remains a fair amount of uncertainty, and it is quite likely that some areas within the warning will see only small amounts of rain.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 20:00 on Wed, 02nd May 2012 until 12:00 on Thu, 03rd May 2012

Outbreaks of locally heavy rain will spread west across southern England and Wales this evening, overnight and into Thursday morning. Totals of 20 to 40 mm are likely in places, falling on saturated ground. The public are advised to be aware of the risk of some disruption from surface water flooding.
