++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Scotland and Northern Ireland will have a cloudy day with outbreaks of rain, which will be heavy in western Scotland. Most parts should be dry and rather cloudy further south, although a little rain is likely around western coasts and hills. Little change is expected overnight.

Outlook for Sunday and Monday:
Sunday will start cloudy with patchy rain in the west and north, but some heavier and more persistent rain will spread across all parts except the southeast by dusk. Monday will become dry and bright across Central and Northern parts, but should stay cloudy with patchy rain in the south.
